a hair revolution

If having your hair lovingly brushed for an hour is your idea of heaven on earth, check out this new Brazilian hair treatment. Nicole Carrington puts it to the test.

I don't know about you ladies, but I think hair brushing is an underused and underrated romantic gesture.

And so it was with great glee that I willingly submitted myself as a guinea pig for new hair treatment Tanagra Nanokeratin at Toni & Guy, Brisbane.

Hair brushing makes you look and feel good, and after enjoying a recent blissful three-week beach holiday, I thought my hair could certainly do with a little extra pampering.

Also available at leading salons, including Spectrum, 7 Main St, Beenleigh, the treatment aims to restore your hair's natural beauty, bounce, strength and flexibility, primarily via a lot of hair brushing from a special wide-bristle brush that omits a fine mist of keratin protein.

It begins with your hair being washed twice with a detoxifying shampoo. Then the beautiful hair brushing part begins, using the latest nanotechnology to pass minute molecules of keratin into the hair shaft.

A wispy but odourless smoke comes off of my hair - cool. My stylist painstakingly applies the treatment to my hair, tiny section by tiny section, and then a heated straightener is used to seal the keratin.

Said to repair damage caused by the sun, colours, blow drying, styling and, ironically, the very same hair straighteners used above, Tanagra Nanokeratin is so new to the marketplace that a small group of hairdressers gather around me in awe and excitement as my stylist applies the treatment to my locks.

Some even repeatedly touch and stroke my hair as it's transformed into a sleek, silky and lustrous "do". Is this what it feels like to be a celebrity? I LIKE it.

My stylist is almost disappointed that my hair is not damaged. After all, this treatment has maximum results with people whose hair resembles a porcupine.

For such follicle-challenged people, it's estimated that up to 80 per cent of hair damage will be rectified after one treatment, 90 per cent after two and 100 per cent after three.
